Indians as Soldiers.

From the Denver Republican. From time to time the suggestion has been made that one or two regiments of Indians should be enlisted in the regugreat while this suggestion will be favorably acted upon. There are several considerations which make the suggestion a good one. The most important of these grows out of the fact that the Indians, if subjected to proper drill and discipline, would make very good cavalry for service in the Far West. It would not be practi-cable to do much with them in the infantry service, for they could not be taught the manual of arms; and that degree of rigid discipline which is es sential in the infantry could not be enforced in their case. But for rough frontier duty, where but little attention need be paid to appearances, an Indian regiment of cavalry could do good

We may learn a lesson from the experience of Mexico. The army of Mexico is composed almost entirely of Indians, and it is a well-known fact that the Mexican cavalry is capable of enduring a great deal of fatigue and of making long marches on short rations. A Mexican regiment is the best kind of ma-terial with which to fight wild Indians. The Indians of this country differ con-siderably from the civilized Indians of Mexico. They are a wilder race, and more warlike, but in those tribes which have made considerable progress in civilization the savage character of the man has been sufficiently subdued to admit of their employment in the cavalry service. They would be just as hardy as the Mexican Indian soldiers, and they could be employed in wars and campaigns against those tribes to which they would not belong. Another consideration in this connec ans are living in idleness. They are being supported by the Government, and they are rendering no service in exchange for the support thus given them. All who would be entitled in the army would be not to presided use and inwould be put to practical use, and in-stead of being supported as idle paupers by the Government, they would render service which would pay for their keep-ing. The man who discovers a way by which Indians can be put to good use, makes a very important discovery. This distinction belongs to him who first suggested the organization of an Indian cavalry regiment.
